Module 1: Why learning mobility

Mark as done

[Module 1 learning outcome(s) if deemed necessary. This text, if placed here will be visible throughout the module]

1. What is learning mobility?

Free movement within the EU is one of the most appreciated results of European cooperation. Mobility of "learners" or students is not something new and the overall conclusion is that:

"Learning mobility has been found to be associated with benefits such as future mobility, higher earnings and lower unemployment. It improves transversal skills such as communication and foreign language skills that are key for an individual's adaptation to the globalised economy and labour market. It is also believed to strengthen cultural awareness as well as citizenship competences. Student exchanges are assumed to positively influence the awareness of complex global issues and the civic skills of participants. Researchers have found that the experience of studying abroad can contribute to shifts in students' beliefs, values and behaviours" (European Commission, Education and Training Monitor, 2018).

This course focuses on shorter periods of learning mobility abroad as part of an education. The basic idea is that you go abroad for a period to study or practice after which you usually return with new skills and qualifications in your luggage.

COVID-19, poverty and other structural violence impacting adolescent career planning in the Global South

Abstract

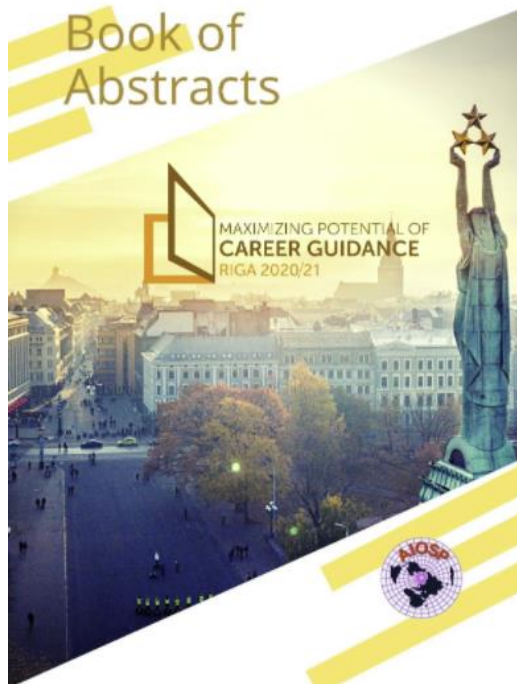

The science of career guidance has evolved remarkably over the decades, and millions of young people have benefited. However, we have to question whether those developments have witnessed a concomitant, proportionate increase in the uptake of career support services across the globe. In other words, do adolescents in the Global South have similar career development opportunities as their counterparts in high-income countries, and what factors are responsible for the discrepancy? Have professionals been vocal enough on the social injustices facing young people in the Global South? A host of social and economic forces influence the availability of career development services. Poverty, gender inequality, insufficient access to high-quality education, and few employment opportunities, are some of the culprits. The COVID-19 pandemic further ravaged educational opportunities in low-income communities, making it even harder for young people to break the cycle of poverty. The presentation explores these issues in the context of our roles as human-service providers and professional societies, advocating for change globally and in our respective national contexts. Lobbying for policy and rights-based changes to secure optimal educational and career opportunities for marginalised groups is a critical responsibility for us to include in our work.
